469 Weller Street

469 Weller Street is an excellent and representative example of a period revival style house influenced by the Arts & Crafts movement, dating from the early twentieth century. Constructed in 1914, it showcases many of the characteristics of period revival styles influenced by the Arts & Crafts movement including Tudor-style and medieval English style elements in its construction materials, small window groupings, asymmetrical massing, and informal orientation, including the gable end facing the street and recessed side entrance through the garden.

The property also has important historical significance as being constructed on land formerly owned by George A. Cox, prominent Peterborough philanthropist, Senator, and financier, and its first owner, Mr. John Crane, a prominent businessman and community member heavily involved in civic activities in Peterborough from the 1880s to 1935.

469 Weller Street has excellent contextual value as it helps to define, maintain, and support the character of the neighbourhood known as the Old West End and yields information about the development of new neighbourhoods in Peterborough and other cities in Canada in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries as a means of retreating from the congested urban centres.
