REASONS FOR DESIGNATION

Description of Property

Campbell Cottage is located at 23 Young Street in the community of Acton, Halton Hills, and is situated on the northwest corner of Young and Arthur Street. The property contains a single storey, timber-framed brick-veneer cottage constructed in 1887. The property is legally described as “LT 40, PL 28, ALSO SHOWN ON PL1098; HALTON HILLS”.

Statement of Cultural Heritage Value or Interest

Campbell Cottage at 23 Young Street has physical and design value as a representative example of a vernacular Ontario Gothic Cottage in the community of Acton within the Town of Halton Hills. The existing building, despite alterations to the roof, has retained significant architectural details characteristic of the Ontario Gothic Cottage style, including its one-storey form, brick exterior, symmetrically placed entrance and windows, the segmentally arched window openings, limestone sills, voussoirs, and transom window. The front elevation has undergone few alterations from the structure’s original form. Campbell Cottage is an excellent example of the quaint, yet ornate vernacular architecture of mid-nineteenth century Acton. This home is a representative example of the Ontario Gothic Cottage in Acton, adapted to the materials and style of the community.

The property at 23 Young Street holds significant historical and associative value due to its association with several prominent citizens and families of Acton. Archibald Campbell, the property's architect and first resident, was a founding member of Acton’s Knox Presbyterian Church, established in 1845. Notably, he remained the last surviving original member of the church until his death in 1899. Campbell served as one of the church's first deacons and was an elder for nearly half a century. His $500 donation was the first and largest contribution towards the construction of the Knox Church. The property also served as the childhood home of Acton war hero Roy Hurd, who was killed in action on April 6, 1916, during World War I. His name is commemorated on Acton’s Cenotaph. From 1923 to 1955, the property was owned by the respected McGregor family. Jessie McGregor, a prominent feminist in the community, hosted weekly meetings of the Farm Women’s Club at the property throughout the 1930s. Additionally, she hosted gatherings of the Knox Ladies Aid group and the Missionary Society at the cottage.

Campbell Cottage at 23 Young Street holds contextual value as the first home of its size on Young Street, setting a precedent for the retirement cottages of similar size and style that later populated the area. The existing home within the subject property is physically, functionally, visually, and historically linked to its surroundings amongst several similar cottages of the same vintage. Positioned at the prominent corner of Young and Arthur Streets, the home on the subject property represents an amalgamation of a vernacular interpretation of the Ontario Cottage style and the modest retirement cottages that came to define Young Street in the late-nineteenth and early-twentieth centuries. The existing building on the property is relative in scale, form, massing, and setback to neighbouring properties and as such has not been identified as a landmark.
