By-law 96-131

This property was once part of a 1200 acre site which was granted to Richard Lovekin Sr. in 1796. Lovekin was the first settler in Clarke and his grandson, Richard Atwood Lovekin, has been recorded as the first white child born in the Township. James Patrickson Lovekin, grandson of Richard Lovekin Sr., built Kilcolman for his bride Isabella Shaw. The house was constructed in two phases, the first being a one storey structure built in 1845 and the second being a second storey addition which was added a few years later. The house was designed in the Neo-classical style with predominant pilasters and lintels, and shows influences of the Regency format in its low hipped roof. The house is designated for its historical significance and the following architectural features:

Exterior

- The pilasters and lintel of the front entrance
- The original glazing of the front entrance sidelights and transom
- The two original French windows of the south façade

Interior

- The dining room cornicing
- The wide wooden baseboards through-out
- The original pine floors and central hall staircase
- The built in china cabinet and three ornate wooden valances
- The original doorway trims with their plaster acanthus leaf corner blocks
- The main entrance doorway trim with its plaster lion's head corner blocks
