SCHEDULE "B" TO BY-LAW 2012-0065

REASONS FOR DESIGNATION

Design/Physical Value (OHA Regulation 9/06)

The Williams-Holt House is a mid-nineteenth century example of Georgian architecture adapted for industrial purposes. As the "factory" grew beyond family enterprises, this style of building was no longer constructed. Besides the usual Georgian features, simplified for an industrial building, the three additional doors emphasize the functionality of the building.

The design value extends beyond the building to encompass the high earthen berm between the house and the river and the apparent flume or raceway which once conducted water from the dam of contemporary vintage.

Historical/Associative Value (OHA Regulation 9/06)

The building is an interesting example of a mid-nineteenth century brick industrial building converted to a house with minimal exterior structural changes. It was one of three buildings which formed an industrial complex. As a brick building situated at the head of the bridge, it was a landmark from the date of construction. It continues to serve as a representative of the historic nature of the village, which lies tucked around the corner.

Cultural Value

The Williams-Holt House is an integral part of the historic core of the village of Glen Williams. The Georgian design associates it with buildings built by the founding family which it was. It also represents a family-based era of industry on which the word "manufacture" – built by hand – was defined.

Description of Heritage Attributes/Character Defining Elements

- English garden-wall pattern red clay bricks made locally
- Industrial adaptation of the Georgian style
- Five original access doors – three of which are bricked in
- Earthen berm which once formed part of an original dam
