SHORT STATEMENT OF THE REASONS FOR THE PROPOSED DESIGNATION

The [redacted] residence is of a modified Italianate style like so many of the larger houses in Town. It is basically a square plan with the windows symmetrically placed and an addition to the south-west corner. The house is lacking a front tower which is common to buildings of this type.

There are several features of the [redacted] home that should be preserved such as the decorative eaves on the original front and the annex, the decorative brick headers over the windows, and the double wooden doors by the main entrance and annex.

The $\frac{1}{2}$ acre lot was originally deeded from Queen Victoria in 1853 but the house was not built until around 1860. In 1870, the property on which the house stands was sold to the Merchants Bank of Canada. The smaller addition held Kincardine's first bank while the larger portion was the Manager's residence.

Prior to being purchased by the Arscotts in 1963, the home was owned by Colonel Hugh Clark, a member of the Federal Cabinet and an uncle of Joe Clark, former Prime Minister of Canada.
